

Disabled and Broken

Being disabled in Britain remains a journey less equal

The Equality and Human Rights Commission promotes and enforces the laws that protect our rights to fairness, dignity and respect. As part of its duties, the Commission provides Parliament and the nation with periodic reports on equality and human rights progress. In Being disabled in Britain: A journey less equal (published April 2017) it assessed the state of equality and human rights for disabled people in Britain and set out the key areas requiring improvement. The overall picture emerging from the data is that disabled people were facing more barriers and falling further behind. They still are.

Poverty and social exclusion

The New Policy Institute in its report Monitoring Poverty and Social Exclusion 2016 found, "One aspect of poverty that can be understated in the official statistics is disability. When the extra costs of disability are partially accounted for, half of all people in poverty are either disabled, or in a household with a disabled person. Disability and family type are significant in explaining the children still in workless households; 46% of children in workless households have at least one disabled adult in the household."

£60,000,000 a year of tax payers' money being wasted

According to the Independent tax payers fund more than £60m a year fighting disability claims even though on average three out of every four (or 98% in our case so far this year) of cases that end up at a benefit tribunal are lost. Tick-box health assessments by giant outsourcing firms lead to many flawed decisions that mean the outlay by the Department for Work and Pensions is wasted. The impact on disabled people from forcing them to fight in the courts, however, can be devastating, pushing some into poverty and increasing levels of stress and anxiety.

Two years before the cost was £44m and that 39% increase is far greater than the increase in applications which was 13% for the same period. Despite all this the outsourcing firms earlier this year had their lucrative multi-million pound contracts extended a further two years to 2023.

Despite knowing that PIP claimants have the lowest level of benefit fraud

According to the DWP's own report Fraud and Error in the Benefit System (published 17/5/2018) fraud overpayments for the various benefits it controls are:

- Housing benefit 4.6%
- Employment and Support Allowance 2.2%
- Pension Credit 3.5%
- Jobseeker's Allowance 4.3%
- Universal Credit 4.7%
- Personal Independence Payment 1.2%

Economically, being disabled is tough enough

According to Scope.com:

- Life costs an extra £583 a month on average if you're disabled.
- Disabled people are over twice as likely to be unemployed.

Disabled people and domestic abuse

The SafeLives report Disabled People and Domestic Abuse found that disabled people are more than twice as likely to experience some form of domestic abuse than non-disabled victims and that they also suffer more severe and frequent abuse over longer periods of time. Even after receiving support, disabled victims were more likely to continue to experience abuse.

Disproportionate suffering during the pandemic

According to the Office for National Statistics in a survey carried out in July 2020 showed that compared to others disabled people were:

- 2X as likely to be concerned about the impact on their well-being;
- 4X more concerned about access to healthcare and treatment;
- 2-3X more likely to feel that the pandemic has worsened their mental health;
- 2X more likely to be feeling lonely and say they spend too much time alone;
- 3X more likely to feel they feel like a burden on others, or have no one to talk to about their worries;
- 3X more likely to feel very unsafe when outside their home.

People with learning disabilities were up to six times more likely to die from Covid-19 during the first wave of the pandemic, analysis shows. A report from Public Health England found the death rate for those with a learning disability was 30 times higher in the 18-34 age group. Mencap said the government had "failed to protect" a group already experiencing health inequalities. (Reported by the BBC, 13 November 2020.)
